

ABSTRACT

An apparatus and method for providing graphic samples of mass customized graphic designs on objects, in either real or virtual form that includes software allowing a user to capture and record keystrokes. The invention operates by incorporating a communications link that includes a public communications network, such as the Internet, along with an electronically coupled user computer and a central computer for proactively merging, manipulating and compiling images to produce output data in the form of virtual items associated with distributed items.

THE